PERSONAL STATEMENT

In the vast mosaic of life's pursuits, I have found myself uniquely positioned at the crossroads of art and medicine. My journey began in the esteemed halls of the Medical Faculty University of Zagreb in Croatia and University Hospital in Zurich, Switzerland where I delved into the intricacies of human anatomy, the poetry of movement, and the transformative power of rehabilitation. This solid foundation in the medical field was my compass, guiding me through the myriad of challenges that patients face, from mobility struggles to neurological complications. Yet, it was my innate passion for the arts that breathed life into my clinical practice, allowing me to see beyond the physical and into the very essence of my patients.

At the Zurich University of Arts, I explored the depths of art mediation and cultural analysis, understanding that art is not merely a form of expression but a powerful tool for communication, healing, and transformation. Just as I used brushes and palettes to paint narratives on canvas, in my medical practice, I utilized my skills to help patients script their own stories of recovery and triumph.

Working as a life coach, I combined my clinical expertise with my artistic sensibilities to help clients sculpt their aspirations. I understood that every individual is a unique piece of art, with layers of experiences, dreams, and challenges. My role was to help them refine these layers, find their authentic self, and motivate them to chase their personal and health goals with renewed vigor.

My art projects and exhibitions, spanning from my home country, Switzerland to the United States of America, from Iran to China are not just displays of creativity; they are embodiments of my philosophy – that art and medicine are two sides of the same coin. Whether it's collaborating on a furniture collection or engaging with unique textiles, I see reflections of my medical journey. Each piece represents resilience, metamorphosis, and the beautiful interplay between structure and freedom.

In a world that often compartmentalizes professions, I have chosen to intertwine my two passions. I believe that medicine heals the body, while art heals the soul. Together, they form a holistic approach to wellness, where physical recovery is complemented by emotional rejuvenation. As I continue to navigate this dual path, I am driven by a singular mission: to harness the transformative powers of both art and medicine to create a more empathetic, understanding, and beautiful world.

My artistic journey is devoted to cultivating creativity by enthusiastically supporting, facilitating, and participating in the fusion of creative minds, all contributing to public art initiatives, museums, and foundations. I am passionately committed to enhancing communication and making art accessible within the community. I hold a strong conviction that the unique attributes of every individual can be harmoniously integrated into a collective entity through joint projects and collaborations. This collective effort guides our creative energies towards the creation of a globally liberated and emotionally resonant society. Embracing our individuality and channeling it into cooperative endeavors not only amplifies our artistic expression but also contributes to a broader, more inclusive narrative that mirrors the intricate mosaic of our collective human journey.
